

In eighteenth-century France, Rose dreams of fashion until a fateful encounter with royalty means she must produce the most unique dress she has ever imagined. Woodfine and illustrator Pankhurst have created an authentic sense of time and place; vivid descriptions of Paris in the 1700s are brought to glorious life by dynamic illustrations. Inspired by the true-life story of Rose Bertin – the woman credited with creating haute couture – Woodfine has written an evocative and inspiring story in which her heroine determines to walk her own path, succeeds and changes the history of fashion for generations to come. This is a story to inspire bold girls and boys everywhere.
